

Probably the Best Idea in the World

Mark Greene

Muddy Pearl

How we love is the most important thing to God, and love is fundamentally about relationship.

At the heart of everything there is one very good idea – the true currency of our society, the key to all human flourishing and happiness. That idea is very simple. It is love, actually. Love God. Love one another. Your neighbour. Your enemy.

Simple – but far from easy. As the statistics and prolific stories of broken friendships, toxic workplaces, divided churches, dysfunctional families and lonely people testify. And yet it is a commandment. The greatest. Not an optional extra, not just a good idea, but the most important one, the one from which all the others flow.

With brilliant storytelling and deep theological insight, Mark Greene explores a simple but liberating framework to help us make decisions that enhance rather than damage our relationships – whether it's about replacing a dishwasher or managing a team. He challenges us to put relationships deliberately back at the center of our calling and discipleship.

Full of humour, contemporary examples and research, Probably The Best Idea in the World shows how Jesus' emphasis on thinking relationally is not only a liberating basis for our personal lives, but a dynamic foundation for our workplaces, our society, and our global community.

'A profound book about a simple idea ... The result is a book that will inspire you, and then help you, to love well and therefore live well.'

Tim Chester

Author

Mark Greene grew up Jewish and joyous, and celebrated becoming a Christian in his early twenties. He worked in advertising in London and New York, loved it, and is still prepared to admit it. He is Director of the London Institute for Contemporary Christianity, and Vice-Principal of the London School of Theology. He speaks, tells stories, and writes, mainly on the joys, trials and surprises of living the whole of life as a follower of Jesus in today's world.
